"City of the Living Dead", or more literally "Fear in the City of the Living Dead Men", is one of Lucio Fulci's classic zombie films. And I want to be up front with you: I have a really mixed feeling about it. If you like Italian horror, you will probably like this movie. If not, it might be a little more difficult to digest.

Even with a vigorous pour, City of the Dead has a very slow-rising head, but it eventually develops into a half-finger of lush, creamy-looking tan foam on top of a straight-black body. The head lasts the entire pint, leaving relatively little lacing in the form of clingy sheets that slide back down as you drink.

Claire DeWitt and the City of the Dead is the fourth novel by Sara Gran, an exquisitely titled and wonderfully composed introduction to what publishers like to call "an unprecedented private investigator." Published in 2011, the author doesn't fall back on gimmick or try to build her mystery on the basis of a quirky characterization—alcoholic private eye, OCD private eye, 1980s private eye—but instead uses drunkenly rich language to unravel a mystery in, where else, New Orleans.
